

The five non-negotiable traits of a benefits management partner

When you work with a benefit management partner, you trust them to help you keep two promises — to safeguard your members' health and to support your providers' decision-making. This is no small order.

Those partners who can protect your promises, which are agile, cohesive, endorsed, supportive, and expansive. How does your partner measure up?

Learn how to assess your medical benefits management partner on the next page.

Starter questions to assess your partner

You know the five traits that your medical benefits management partner must have. But how can you assess whether your partner has them? Use the questions below to start your analysis.

Agile

- What are the benefit management partner capabilities, and how do they support members' and providers' decision-making across the continuum of care?
- What strategies does the organization offer to improve providers' experiences?

Endorsed

- What percentage of providers in your market use the benefit management partner's solutions? How have your providers reacted to them?
- Are providers satisfied with the organization's clinical guidelines?
- Are the organization's clinical leaders well recognized within the healthcare community?

Supportive

- Are their physician reviewers responsive and helpful?
- How quickly are cases resolved, including those that undergo peer-to-peer review?
- How does the organization educate providers and support them?

Expansive

- How broad is the benefit management partner suite of solutions and experience?
- Has the organization introduced innovative programs that address your most pressing challenges, such as value-based reimbursement, member education, and site-of-care optimization?
- How many acquisitions has the organization undergone? Is the organization free from conflicts of interest, or does a major competitor own them?

Cohesive

- Does the benefit management partner offer a single platform or several disparate ones?
- Do the workflows enabled by the organization integrate well with providers' delivery of care?
- How structured and consistent are the organization's operations, such as their implementation process?
